| Remember, the setting of the story is when and where it takes place. Some stories may convey this to you directly, but some do not, and you may need to make inferences using your knowledge and what the story does tell you. Pick a story that you know and find pictures on Google images that help represent the setting. Copy and paste them into a word document (make a collage) and share it with your ELA teacher.  | Review author point of view with TEDEd! Click here for a refresher.  | Click here to play a game that will allow you to practice phrasal verbs. Remember, phrasal verbs are verbs that combine with a preposition or adverb to make a phrase that means something different than the two words individually. Some examples are: turn around, hang up, call off, give away, etc.  | Think about an event in your life that might make a good film, then story board it! Filmmakers sometimes use story boards to plan their movies. Click here to use Story Board That, a free online storyboard creator.  | Career clusters are groups of careers that share common skills or themes. Click here to take a quiz that might offer you some insight into what career cluster might be right for you.  |
