Transitional words and phrases show the relationships between ideas in a sentence. They guide the reader from one sentence to another. Some transitions are phrases, such as for example, after all, in addition, and on the contrary. Other transitions are conjunctions that are also adverbs because they modify the verb. These are words like similarly, still, also, otherwise, instead, meanwhile, and however. Click here to practice using transition words (check your work afterwards with the key!)	Tuesday The cause is why something happens. The effect is what happens. A causal chain is a series of events that are connected to one another. One event may be both the effect of an earlier event and the cause of a later event. Click here to read an informational article Fill in the blanks on the chart below after you read the article.
